byThe antinociceptive efficacy of a topical alpha-2 adrenoceptor agonist and a nonsteroidal anti-inflammatory drug. We have previously reported that the antinociceptive efficacy of tizanidine (0.1-1 mg/kg, s.c.) was completely antagonised by pre-treatment with the alpha 2 adrenoceptor (AR) antagonist, RX 781094. This study aimed to investigate the antinociceptive efficacy of a topical alpha 2 AR agonist and a nonsteroidal anti-inflammatory drug. Both compounds have previously been reported to be effective in animal models of inflammatory pain; therefore, we have assessed their efficacy in several models of nociception. Intraplantar capsaicin (1 microg) was used to model inflammatory nociception and the effects of diclofenac, sumatriptan, tizanidine and the alpha 2 agonist clonidine were assessed. The anti-hyperalgesic effects of clonidine, but not tizanidine, were significantly blocked by RX 781094. The dose of clonidine which was found to inhibit capsaicin-induced hyperalgesia in the tail flick test was used to determine the effects of this compound on thermal hyperalgesia (hot-plate test) and mechanical
