According to the English localisation for Windows 10, File Explorer is locked I have not specified any lock request. Why is this message shown? A: The lock screen is triggered when users select multiple items in File Explorer and then lock the PC. This is because a simple selection doesn't really mean that you're ready to work, it just means that you're looking at the selection. If there's enough of them, the user should not have to wait for each one of them, the time spent on waiting should be as short as possible. If you look at the History tab of the settings, you'll see that when there's a long list of items (which triggers the lock screen), there's a tag next to each item. If you select a tag, the items inside the selected tag will be locked, the others are free for work. Another way to tell if your computer has been locked is by looking at the notification area on the right side of your taskbar, it should have a lock icon. File Explorer window itself has a lock icon as well, to lock it, right click on the title and select "Lock this window". Q: Using # to mark a specific area of a page Usually, I've read some text, and when I'm done, I mark it with a bookmark or something of that nature.
