Dual and multiple specificity of a serine proteinase from Streptococcus pyogenes. Streptococcus pyogenes produces two serine proteinases designated SPase I and II (R. J. Steer, J. F. Barker, and J. L. Birge, J. Biol. Chem. 265: 6401-6415, 1990). In this study, both enzymes were purified by affinity chromatography and characterized. Both enzymes hydrolyzed zymogens of pancreatic trypsin, chymotrypsin, and elastase. In addition, SPase I could also activate several plasminogen-binding proteins. In contrast, SPase II could not activate plasminogen, but it cleaved both the main plasmin inhibitor, alpha
