Acute ischaemia in the peripheral nervous system in sickle cell disease: magnetic resonance imaging findings in five children. Magnetic resonance (MR) imaging was performed in five children with sickle cell disease and acute clinical signs of peripheral nervous system (PNS) ischaemia. All patients showed T2 and T1-weighted images demonstrating a circumferential inhomogeneous signal attenuation in the muscles of the leg and thigh. It is suggested that this represents a pathological process of the underlying PNS vasculature.
