Apple just sold 2 million new Macs. As you might expect, it also sold 2 million new iPads. But there's something really odd about the numbers: Apple just sold 5 million new iPads since the iPad 2 launched in October 2010. I'm aware that the first iPad sold out in the first 24 hours, and that the original iPad sold out within 2 days. But just since last year, Apple has now sold more than 5 million new iPads. In other words, it seems like demand for iPads is continuing to grow at a pretty rapid pace. That's a trend that's continued even as the iPad has become more powerful, with an ever-increasing number of apps. It's also made the iPad a viable alternative to desktops and laptops for many people. Here are some charts that speak to Apple's continued demand for iPads. And the bottom line? For Apple, the iPad is a hit. From today's numbers, Apple still sold more Macs than iPads in the last quarter. But that's not a concern for the company — after all, it now has more iPads than Macs (at least for the first 9 months of the year). Apple is still sold out of Macs, but it also has more iPads than the Mac-owning population. And that's because there's no end in sight to iPad demand — Apple has sold more iPads than Macs since the second quarter of 2010. I still think that Apple will replace the Mac with an iPad one day, and that it's already begun to make that transition. But for now, I'm focused on the continuing demand for iPads. How many of you are still carrying around your old iPad? Or is that old-fashioned? [Apple, iPad, BusinessWeek]

Evidence of drug resistance mutations in the hepatitis C virus NS3 protease associated with a treatment-induced relapse in a patient with chronic hepatitis C genotype 1a. Treatment-induced relapse (TIR) is one of the most frequent causes of poor response to antiviral therapy in patients with chronic hepatitis C (CHC). The study aims to describe the molecular dynamics of TIR and to
