Email An Llanrwst garage has been rammed to pieces and is blocking a road after a serious accident. The collision was reported to be at the junction of Moch and Hillgrove Road at 7.10am this morning, with two vehicles involved. When North Wales Fire and Rescue Service arrived, one driver had been trapped and could not be extracted. The service say that after two fire engines were called, the driver was freed and taken to hospital for treatment. A spokesman said: "A C500 ambulance also attended."

Further details were not available. Hepatitis B virus precore protein is not essential for initiation of virus replication and expression of hepatitis B virus e antigen. Hepatitis B virus (HBV) precore mRNA of genotype A contains an insertion of two guanosines (nucleotides 1657 and 1658) in the coding sequence that is thought to enhance expression of the hepatitis B e antigen (HBeAg). The contribution of this insertion to the replication of this virus is unknown. The effect of the insertion on virus replication and HBeAg expression was examined by introduction of mutant precore mRNAs into human hepatoma cells. The mutant precore mRNAs were transcribed from a plasmid containing the DNA sequence encoding the precore and the HBV pgRNA. Stable transfection of HBV genome-containing plasmids to cells containing the mutant precore mRNAs resulted in suppression of expression of HBV e antigen (HBeAg) in about 50% of the clones examined. HBV e antigen (HBeAg) was expressed at detectable levels in about 50% of the control clones. Viral DNA replication was observed at the same level in mutant and control clones. Serum samples 2d92ce491b
