A: I was able to load your current code with the following changes:

//open the file StreamReader SR =
    new StreamReader(filename);
//read the entire file string line;
    string[] data = new
string[file.Length]; //check the file

---

is open if(SR.ReadLine() ==
"Greeting") while((line = SR.ReadLine())!= null) { data[x]
= line; x++; } //close the file
SR.Close(); After this change is made you can loop through each line of data. EDIT: Here is a great video on reading a text file in C# Fertility in long-term partners of infertile couples. To assess fertility in long-term partners of infertile couples. The authors surveyed a cohort of 100 long-
term partners of infertile couples,
including both men and women

who had been infertile for 3 to 5 years. The partners were queried about their own desire for children, fertility, previous attempts at having children, and use of infertility treatments. Subsequently, the couples were interviewed to confirm the data. One hundred long-term partners of infertile couples were surveyed about their fertility and had previously attempted to have children. Among the partners who had at least two previous attempts, the average time to conceive after the last attempt was 18 months.

Half of the partners had never tried to have children. Despite the desire of about half of the partners to have children, among the couples in this study, only 17% of men and 2% of women had attempted to have children after the second attempt. There were few age or race differences in reproductive attitudes. This study documents that, despite the desire of many partners to have children, only a small minority of couples with partners who desire children are attempting to conceive. The couple should be counseled about the risks, time, and expenses of infertility treatment. The partners who are not attempting to conceive should be counseled about the risks of declining fertility with time and the need for future attempts at conception.
