Aseba is a free robotic programming software for Thymio robots. It can support both real and simulated robots. The library includes prewritten sketches, tools, scripts and game engines for developing your own robot projects. Overview Aseba is a free software that helps to control a robot through your computer. It can be used for real life robotic programming, but also for educational purposes to develop a fully autonomous or unmanned robot. As of today, Aseba can only be used with Thymio real robots. Using Aseba's robotics programming language, the easiest way to program with a robot can be done. Through Aseba's "virtual environment", the robot can be programmed to perform several tasks. The program can be made of a huge number of "bots", "extras", and "action components" in Aseba. The activity level of the robot can be defined by changing the task level in the main menu. Using a "game engine", the user can select from a number of sketch files. This includes scripts for multiple robots, which can be used to control a robot in a virtual environment. As of today, Aseba can only be used with Thymio real robots. Depending on the robot, Aseba can be used to control other compatible devices, such as LEDs, sensors, motors, servo motors, stepper motors, or even a laser scanner. All compatible devices can be easily added, using a VISA card from MAX. For controlled devices, the sensor range can be defined to match the robot's workspace. Through a user friendly programming interface, the user can execute Aseba scripts, or create his own robots. Aseba's programming language looks similar to the MATLAB language. The user can define which data type of script should be loaded. Aseba also supports mathematical functions, which can make writing software a lot easier. After the program is loaded, the user can put it into an "action", or "run it" to execute it. Through the menu system, the user can define the exact tasks a robot should execute, how many times it should execute them, and where to find the robot or sensor in the environment that should be controlled by the script. Aseba can work with real Thymio robots and with both simulated and real environments. Aseba is free and open source. Supported Devices Aseba can control the following devices. 09e8f5149f
