Q: How to run python script only once per day? I'm currently trying to solve a problem where I need to run a python script every day at a certain time. My problem is: How do I make sure the python script only runs once per day at a certain time? I thought I could do something like: `import os` `daily = []` `now = os.time()` `while now.time() > datetime.now(utc = True):` `daily.append(True)` `print('scripts executed')` But this will always append the time the script was run to the list daily. So it will always run the script as many times as it was run before, not once per day. How do I solve this problem? A: Try a scheduling library (scheduling library example). The basic logic is that you save the time at which the script was run, when it's time to run it again check if the current time is still the same as the saved time (see the example).

Addressing the health care crisis in the United States through evidence-based policy. The United States is in the midst of a public health crisis. Data from more than 60 years ago have shown the effectiveness of health care reform for its population and now have the potential to provide insight and guidance for those seeking to address the growing crisis in the United States today. The National Center for Health Statistics reports that the prevalence of obesity has increased significantly in the past 20 years, with approximately 30% of the adult population being obese. Given the detrimental health impact of obesity, the prevalence of diabetes has also increased, affecting 5.7% of the US population. Obesity and diabetes are the leading causes of premature death and disability in the US. With this burden of disease in mind, the National Center for Health Statistics reported that the US spent $2.6 trillion on health care and $193.7 billion on health insurance in
