The mitosis-karyorrhexis index (MKI) is a simple method for evaluating tumour aggressiveness in cases of oral squamous cell carcinoma (OSCC). However, no correlation has been reported between MKI and patient prognosis. In the present study, we aimed to determine the prognostic significance of MKI in patients with OSCC. We retrospectively investigated the case records of 393 patients with primary OSCC. The clinicopathological features of the patients and the MKI were evaluated. The MKI was also compared between patients with and without nodal metastasis. Recurrence, disease-specific and overall survival were also investigated. A total of 111/393 (28.5%) patients presented with nodal metastasis and 306/393 (77.3%) 570a42141b
