Insights from the Illumina 450K Methylation BeadChip. Few population-based studies investigated how the combined effect of physical activity (PA) and nutrition may impact on DNA methylation. A major issue in many areas is the measurement of this information which is known to vary with the performance of different Illumina 450K methylation arrays. The objective of this study was to determine whether there is a trade-off between PA and nutrition as a proxy of dietary behaviors and if so, whether this trade-off differs according to the performance of 450K methylation arrays. It was hypothesized that there would be a trade-off between the performance of the 450K methylation arrays and nutrition and PA. This was a cross-sectional population-based study involving 750 adults, of whom 348 performed the 450K methylation assays and provided dietary and PA information. PA and nutrition were highly correlated with the performance of the Illumina 450K methylation arrays. The impact of PA on the genome was higher than that of nutrition. These findings support the hypothesis of a trade-off between PA and nutrition. The associations between PA and nutrition, and the performance of 450K methylation assays need to be explored further.
