1. Field of the Invention The present invention relates generally to a program storage medium, and more particularly, to a program storage medium and a method of reproducing a program.

2. Description of the Related Art Digital rights management (DRM) is a technology that protects a content copyright. There are two types of DRM, the first type being a content protection method using digital rights objects (DRO) that is pre-installed on a content player. The second type being a user-based content protection method that can be applied to the content stored in a content player. Content players on which a user-based content protection method is implemented do not store DRO. The user-based content protection method includes a method of storing a license key (i.e., a secret) to restrict access to a program and a method of storing a secret in a license file or an external storage medium. The license key or the secret is used to detect whether the content player has paid or not. Methods of generating a license file or an external storage medium storing a license key are disclosed in Korean Patent Publication No. 10-2008-0057858 (published on Mar. 18, 2008) and Korean Patent Publication No. 10-2008-0057847 (published on Mar. 18, 2008), respectively. The methods of generating a license file or an external storage medium storing a license key include a method of downloading a license file or an external storage medium storing a license key from a predetermined server and a method of generating a license file or an external storage medium storing a license key in a content player. In the above-mentioned methods, a problem exists in that information about a plurality of contents stored in a content player is not considered in generating a license file or an external storage medium
