I've ran hbase init at the root level of my HDFS filesystem and it did it's thing successfully. I now want to restart the server and reload the metadata. How do I do that? A: In case of a restart, it's quite easy to move your tables and regions into a local folder and then load the definitions from HDFS.

Here's how to do that in bash: # create a local folder mkdir -p /tmp/hbase # move your tables and regions to the folder, just like HBase does in the script it runs before creating the regions/tables hbase-move-tablet-data /tmp/hbase/regions /tmp/hbase/tables # reload the regions/tables hbase hbase -reload /tmp/hbase/regions The next time you run init, HBase will recognize the new folder and load the same files as you had before. A: You should be able to stop the cluster by doing a shutdown -h now or a halt. Then you can restart the cluster with start_hbase.sh. If that doesn't work, you can also start the cluster by doing: hadoop namenode -format hadoop datanode -format hadoop fs -put /tmp/hbase/your_table_name /tmp/hbase/your_table_name A: you can directly restart HBase by doing as follows $hbase shell #Stop the HBase Master stop-master.sh #Start the HBase Master start-master.sh #Stop all regionservers stop-regionservers.sh #Start the HBase Master start-master.sh
